Printing-Office in the Main Street.

A STRIKING INSTANCE OF GREATNESS OF SOUL.

THE Count de Barri, Governor of Eucate in Languedoc, in the reign of Henry IV. was taken prisoner by the league, and confined in the city of Narbonne then in the power of that faction. The confederates threatened him with the most cruel death unless he would surrender up his government; but received for answer, that he was not afraid of death. Barri had a young wife in Eucate: The fact on thinking they should more easily triumph on her, let her know the danger of her husband, and promised to spare both her and his life if she would give up the town. The answer this lady returned, was, that the honour of her husband was dearer to her than his life. Their greatness of soul was equal, Barri was put to death, and his widow, after having defended the place with success, retired to a convent at Beziers, where she spent the residue of her days.

The son of the generous, noble minded Barri, succeeded his father in the government of Eucate. In 1637, Sebelioni, having invested the town, attempted to corrupt his integrity, and promised him considerable advantages, if he would enter into a treaty with him. The history of his father's conduct, which he had received to his letter.

Remarkable dying speech of Mr. Ousse, secretary to the Earl of Essex, who was executed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, for the same offence which brought his master the Duke.

I AM here adjudged to die for acting an act never intended, for plotting a plot never acted. Justice will hear course; accusers must be heard; greatness will have victory: Scholars and martialists (though learning and valour should have the pre-eminence) in England must die like dogs, and be hanged. To mistake this was but folly; to dispute it, but times lost; to alter it, impossible: But to endure it is manly; and to scorn it, magnanimity.

The Queen is displeased, the lawyers injuries, and death terrible: But I crave pardon of the Queen; forgive the lawyers, and the world; desire to be forgiven; and welcome death.

The WISDOM of PROVIDENCE: An APOLOGUE. From the German of the celebrated Gellert.

DURING the violence of a storm, a traveller implored relief from Jupiter, and intreated him to assuage the tempest. But Jupiter lent a deaf ear to his intreaty. Struggling with the unabating fury of the whirlwind, tired, and far from shelter, he grew pævilish and discontented. "Is it thus," he said, "the gods to whom our sacrifices are offered daily, heedless of our welfare, and amused with our sufferings, make an ostentatious parade of their omnipotence?" At length, approaching the verge of a forest, 'Here,' he cried, 'I shall find that succour and protection which Heaven, either unable or unwilling to aid me, hath refused.' But, as he advanced, a robber rose suddenly from a brake; and our traveller, impelled by instant terror and the prospect of great danger, betook himself to flight, exposing himself to the tempest of which he had so bitterly complained. His enemy, mean while, fitting an arrow to his bow, took exact aim; but, the bow-string being relaxed with the moisture, the deadly weapon fell short of its mark, and the traveller escaped uninjured. As he continued his journey, a voice issued awful from the clouds: 'Meditate on the Providence as well as on the power of Heaven: The storm which you deprecated so blasphemously hath been the means of your preservation. Had not the bow-string of your enemy been rendered useless by the rain, you had fallen a prey to his violence.'

CHINESE MORALS.

WHEN fortune smiles most upon you, then is the time to watch her most narrowly;

Art thou got into the humour of talking, take heed what escapeth thy lips;

A man ought not to suffer himself to be dejected by bad fortune.

A man who is master of himself, whatever accidents befall him, will never be at a loss how to behave.

ON THE IMPORTANCE OF GOVERNING THE PASSIONS.

THE important lesson of life, says a fine writer, is the government of the passions. Few I believe will deny this assertion, and yet how few appear the least solicitous to acquire so great and necessary a lesson, notwithstanding they are sure that the neglecting it must one day, on a retrospect of their past life, be productive of distress, which no pen can sufficiently describe? The last and inevitable hour is, however, unperceived, making incessant advances; and what at that awful period, will be able to afford us the least satisfaction? The failings of thoughtless youth, and the more permitted faults of advanced age, will then stare us in the face, and the best of our worldly enjoyments appear but as specious sins, the blandishments of sense. We shall despise the splendor of a dying chamber; and the concern of our friends will rather retard than further a repentance: we may intend to defer it till that improper season, when all sublunary enjoyments will tend to increase the poignancy of our apprehensions.

But is there no path we may tread during the sportive days of blooming youth, that will enable us to bear with fortitude every evil we may be exposed to in our journey through life, support us with composure under the separating stroke, and fit us for an acquittal at the grand tribunal hereafter? Doubtless there is—follow the dictates of reason and religion, which forcibly command us to keep our passions in subjection, and practise, without ostentation, the great virtues of piety, benevolence, and justice. If we perform these duties, we shall soon experience a serenity of mind which vice can never give: it will be a satisfaction unallayed by remorse, and will qualify us to bear every affliction with a cheerful resignation, and prove an “unerring road to everlasting happiness.”

Nor did the bounteous god refuse.
But when he had obtain'd his pray'rs,
And fondly hug'd the shining ore,
Possession drew a train of cares,
A numerous train, unknown before
Thus with much heavier toil oppress'd,
Again he tells the god his pain;

VIII. Mo. AUGUST, hath 31 Days. 1780.

The golden harvest pays the farmer's care,
And choicest sweets perfume the ambient air;
Th' enliv'ning season crowns each heart with joy,
Be then their Maker's praise their sweet employ;
May all reform, and his great name adore,
From age to age, till time shall be no more.

The young, the old here fix their doating looks,
Fops at their glass, and students at their books;
Whom Reason vainly points with solid plan,
To slide from letters to a glance of man.
Bereft of conquests, and despoil'd of crown,
Thus honest Truth is banish'd with a frown.

ELEGIAC REFLECTIONS on W I N T E R.

'TIS Winter! mark the soft descending snow,
Has rob'd the fields, and whitened ev'ry scene;
The hail loud rattles, while rough tempests blow,
Now rain pours down, and deluges the plain.
But 'tis in man's reflective pow'r to warm,
And baulk the rigour of the inclement year,
To paint the past, or bid the future charm,
Since Hope supports, when disappointment's near.
'Tis her's to reach kind comfort from afar,
To paint the verdent Spring, and flow'ry trees:
To extend the view to Summer's sultry car,
And barter tempests for the cooling breeze.
'Tis Heav'n permits these shifting scenes below,
To wean our passions from the uncertain state,
And bid affection in that channel flow,
Where Winters ne'er approach, nor tempests wait.
Thus the poor trav'ler, on some desert land,
Far from his wife, and tender offspring dear,
Struck with the rueful waste around, may stand,
Sick of his home, and drop a longing tear.

M A X I M S for REPUBLICS.

THERE is a wide difference between power being derived from the people and being seated in the people. The former proposition cannot be too often inculcated in a free country. Disorder and tyranny must ensue from all power being seated in the bulk of the people.

The great art of government, says the Bishop of St. Asaph, is not to govern too much. This excellent maxim should be written in golden characters over the door of every state-house.

Some men think that tyranny can be opposed only in the person of a King, but this is a mistake. The "ardor civium prava jumentum" is as much to be dreaded as the "valtas instantis tyranni." There are men who are undaunted in their opposition to a single tyrant, who are notwithstanding the slaves of the prejudices and passions of the people.

A method of making sea-water potable.

SEA-WATER becomes fresh by making it pass through marine plants. I took a glass vessel, of an oblong form, and, having partly filled it with sea-water, I put therein a proper quantity of the alga marina, or sea-weed; the roots of some of which were naked, and quite clear of any foreign body; but to the rest were still adhering the pebbles that served to support them in the sea. The vessel being then full, I fitted to it a glass-head, with its beak, to which I joined a receiver, without luting the joints. There distilled daily from these plants a small quantity of water, very fresh, very potable, and quite free from the ill taste, which waters distilled by fire usually retain.

This experiment shews the easiest, surest, and most natural method of making sea-water fresh, a matter of such singular utility to navigators.

I doubt not but we may find other plants, among those growing either in the sea or on its shores, which may be more effectual for this experiment, and which yield fresh water in great quantity, as rock-samphire, the brassica marina, or kali-kind, the sea-lentil, &c. Some of these plants may be tried, by examining their growth either in sea-water, or earth sprinkled with it. And hence, in some measure, the conjecture may be very probable, that the real primitive water, which might have existed before animals and plants, is sea-water; and that fresh-water is, for the most part, indebted for its origin to the vapours of plants, the respiration of animals, and the exhalations of the earth, attracted by the heat of the sun.

A Liquor to wash old deeds and writings, &c.

TAKE five or six galls, bruise them and put them into about a pint of the very best white wine, let it stand in the sun two days, you will by trial soon see whether it is too strong or too small; dip a brush into it, and wash the part wanted to be cleared up.

ON CONVERSATION.

TH E Laws of Conversation are, in general, not to labour over any subject, but to pass over easily, without effort or affectation, from one to another; to speak occasionally on frivolous as well as on serious objects; to remember that conversation is a relaxation, and not like a fencing-school, nor a game of Chess; in a word, to allow the fancy to range at freedom. You are not to engross the discourse to yourself, nor to deliver your opinions in a magisterial tone; as this must be very disgusting to the hearers, and prepossesses them against you.

There can be no situation in which we are less able to conceal our self love than in conversation; and we are always sure to lose by mortifying the pride of others, who will naturally be desirous to revenge themselves; and their ingenuity seldom fails instantly to discover an opportunity. Another defect to be shunned is, speaking like one reading, and having what is called a well-written conversation. A conversation ought no more to be like a written discourse, than the latter like a conversation. What is pretty singular is, that those who fall into the former blemish, seldom escape the other: Because they are in the use of speaking as they would write, they imagine they ought to write as they speak. It should be a rule, That a man cannot be too much on his guard when he writes for the Public, and never too easy towards those with whom he converses.
